

Case Study 5:

1. Issue is basically she's making assumptions about the women's life. She assumes that if her story has a moral she can manipulate the biography of Mary Kay for her speech. While the end result is ethically virtuous the means she used to achieve it is debatable. She cannot go around altering history and the biographies of people as she pleases if it suits her needs.
2. It harms no one but it's about the principal rather than the ethical concerns. One cannot go about altering and re-writing someone's life history to suit his or her needs. No matter how white of a lie or miniscule change, no matter how good the end goal, it's plain disrespectful.
3. The speaker must ensure total and complete honesty on her behalf, whatever she presents must be factual and the pure truth or else they would suffer in their credibility.
